NEW CHINESE ATLAS OF ADMINISTRATIVE DIVISIONS

East View Cartographic (EVC) is pleased to offer the most authoritative atlas of China in years. The just-published People's Republic of China Atlas of Administrative Divisions is essential for academic and public libraries of all sizes. If you only acquire one atlas of China for your collection, consider this publication. It is by far the most important, authoritative, and useful for the serious user.

International boundaries are often the subject of intense controversy but few are aware that provincial borders in China have long been subject to disputes and uncertainty. For over 3000 years the boundaries of many provinces and other territorial units have been unclear, even within China. This situation has cost human lives even in modern times.

Responding to the great demand of Chinese officials at all levels, the People's Republic of China Atlas of Administrative Divisions clarifies thousands of political-administrative boundaries (provincial, prefectural, county and township), and standardizes tens of thousands of geographic names. It represents a major advance in the contemporary mapping of China. Previous atlases show up to 80 percent of internal borders in a schematic, rough way because of border controversies.

The detail in this atlas is stunning and is based on the culmination of years of intensive fieldwork. All boundaries depicted are generated from actual field surveys conducted from 1995 to 2002. There are hundreds of detailed maps of provinces, counties, and cities. All are based on a clearly-identified set of authoritative source materials, including (for the first time ever) China's new national digital GIS databases at 1:250,000 and 1:1,000,000 scales.

Measuring 30 x 42 cm, this atlas includes hundreds of maps of China's 34 provincial (sheng) units, 333 prefectures (shi/di), 2,862 counties (xian) and about 40,000 townships (xiang), clearly showing their boundaries, geographic names, and related information. The provincial, prefectural, and county boundaries are current as of June 2005; the township boundaries are current as of December 2004.

The atlas also includes three major indexes:

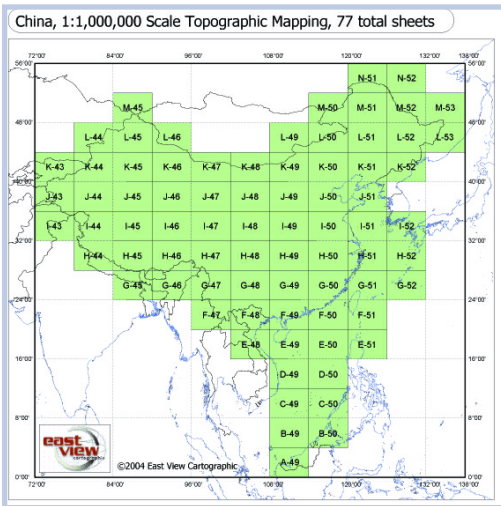

- A clear hierarchy of the political-administrative structure of China down to the township level
- An index of unique and rarely-encountered Chinese characters and their pinyin equivalents, with a pronunciation guides.
- A general index of over 30,000 names

The atlas is jointly published by the Ministry of Civil Affairs, the State Bureau of Surveying and Mapping and SinoMaps Press (China Cartographic Publishing House).
